Apartment-fire probe set to begin

Severe damage.Dozens left homeless in Sackville

RUTH DAVENPORT ruth.davenport@metronews

Fire investigators will be at an apartment complex in Lower Sackville on Monday to determine the cause of a fire that forced dozens of people from their homes.

The fire was reported at about 12:40 a.m. on Saturday at 30 Touchstone Court, and destroyed or seriously damaged the apartments in that building.

"Certainly the upper floors are pretty much

Another 12 apartments in an adjoining building at 22 Touchstone Court sustained smoke and water damage, and Bedell said those tenants will be living elsewhere for a few days.

"They should be fine to go back home once that second section has been checked and cleaned up and repaired and the power turned back on," he said.

Though the cause is not yet known, the fire appeared to originate on the upper levels of 30 Touchstone Court.

Bedell said roughly 50 people were forced from their apartments, though no one was seriously hurt.

He said most of the displaced tenants are staying with friends or family, and a handful have been provided with rooms in local motels.

"Some of them needed assistance with emergency purchases of some clothing and food," he said, adding the Salvation Army is helping to provide mobile meals at the site.

Police say it's believed the motorcycle driver lost control of his vehicle, and after falling to the road, was struck by the tractor trailer. He died at the scene.

Police don't know what caused the bike to lose control, but MacGillivray said road conditions weren't a factor. He said mechanical testing will be done on the motorcycle as part of the investigation. Traffic was being re-routed on Sunday night as police investigated the crash.

Pakistani police say at least eight people in the port city of Karachi have died after consuming homemade liquor.

Police officer Mohammad Sarwar said Sunday that 14 people from Christian-dominated slums in the city, Pakistan's largest, were hospitalized after drinking toxic liquor late Saturday night.

Liquor poisoning is common in Pakistan, where the Muslim majority is forbidden to consume or sell alcohol. Non-Muslims can drink, but many poor buy the cheapest homemade liquor, which is often adulterated.

Former sex slaves cry out for recognition

A tearful Philippine woman recounted Sunday how she was kidnapped by Japanese troops during the Second World War and forced into sex slavery, as she and her supporters gathered to demand Japan do more to bring justice to former "comfort women."

Estelita Dy, 83, and her supporters met in Tokyo as part of events to commemorate the day the first victim of Japanese sex slavery came forward on Aug. 14, 1991.

Rights groups are trying to gain international support to have Aug. 14 become a UN-recognized memorial day as a way to pressure Japan to take more responsibility.

Prime Minister Shinzo Abe has backpedalled from Tokyo's past apologies, saying there's no proof Japan's wartime government forced women into prostitution.

At Sunday's meeting, Dy's supporters criticized Abe's government for rejecting a UN human-rights panel's recommendations earlier this year that urged Japan to better educate the public and take steps to bring justice for the victims.

In a tearful speech, Dy said she was kidnapped by soldiers when she went to a market to sell vegetables, when she was 14. Dy was repeatedly raped for three weeks until American troops rescued her.

Historians say there were up to 200,000 sex slaves from across Asia. The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Suspect shot dead. Teen and abductor stood out in wild: Horseback riders

The four horseback riders who encountered a California teen and her abductor said Sunday that they decided to contact police because the pair seemed out of place and ill-equipped for the Idaho wilderness.

DiMaggio was killed by au-

The area is extremely steep, and the closest point where the helicopters could drop a rescue team was more than two hours away. The agents crept close to the camp, waited until DiMaggio and Hannah separated, and then moved in.

The case began when the charred bodies of Hannah's mother and eight-year-old brother were found on Aug. 4 in DiMaggio's burning house.

Toronto mayor. 'I had a couple beers,' video blown out of proportion: Ford

Toronto Mayor Rob Ford said he had a couple of beers at a street festival Friday night but contended videos that have sparked a torrent of criticism are being blown out of proportion.

"I drove myself down there, I was not drinking. I went out, had a few beers and I did not drive home. My people met me after that," Ford told his weekly radio show on News-Talk 1010.

Three videos posted online Friday show the mayor apparently enjoying a night on the town and bantering with residents.

Many people took to Twitter in response to the video posting to criticize and ridicule the mayor, accusing him of being drunk and scolding his behaviour.

"Yet another public shame from our mayor," one person posted on Twitter.

But Ford says he doesn't think he did anything that would offend anyone.

"Did I have a couple beers? Absolutely I had a couple beers," Ford said.

Mayor Ford's behaviour has attracted international attention since news reports surfaced this year of an alleged video that appeared to show him smoking crack cocaine

Real estate. New data muddies predictions for housing market

Canada's much-watched housing market is sending out mixed signals these days — even for analysts.

A spate of fresh data and yet one more market-cooling tweak from Ottawa last week has put one of the most important sectors in the Canadian economy, and the most important asset-source for most Canadians, on a kind of death watch.

That's because while some of the data, such as home prices and starts, is pointing to the soothing "soft landing" that homeowners, economists, banks and politicians are fingers-crossed hoping for, others, like land purchases and building permits suggest the real message is: the crash is coming.

Last week, Statistics Canada reported that building permits in the residential sector fell 12.9 per cent in June, and permits for multi-unit dwellings — mostly condos — sank even further by 18.8 per cent.

Even more friightening, research conducted by RealNet Canada found that in some of the bigger markets — Toronto, Vancouver and Calgary — residential land investments for fuBuilding permits ture home building has already crashed through the floor, plunging 51, 52 and 30 per cent respectively.

Muddying the picture is that a new temperature reading of the housing market from the Canadian Real Estate Association to be released on Thursday is likely to show that home sales are doing just dandy and likely rose significantly in July, along with average home prices.

But David Madani of Capital Economics says it is the calm before the storm. Or as he put it in a note to clients — "homebuilders are having a Wile E. ROCKY PRACTISED WHAT HE BELIEVED

Stephen Kimber halifax@metronews.ca

The last time I talked faceto-face with Rocky Jones was in November 2011, a few nights before he was scheduled to deliver a public lecture on "The Struggle for Human Rights in African Nova Scotian Communities, 1961-2011.

It could have been the too-wordy title for his autobiography.

We met at 8 p.m. in my university office because there was no other time. There was this national con-

Leaving a legacy

Rocky and I were never personal friends, but I was privileged to chronicle pieces of his public life well spent in the service, not just of his people but of our province.

That Rocky was then pushing 70 seemed — at the time—inconsequential.

That he is no longer with us seems incomprehensible.

Rocky and I were never personal friends, but I was privileged to chronicle pieces of his public life well spent in the service, not just of his people but of our province.

Not everything he did, it's fair to say, was appreciated in its time.

In the '60s, he ran Kwacha House, an inner-city youth program that tapped a rich vein of pent-up black anger and frustration. City fathers lobbied to cut funding. In 1970, he helped rally 4,000 Haligonians — black and white — to protest the appointment of a racist city manager. The protesters won. He brought the Black Panthers to Halifax and so scared the establishment that Ottawa quickly funded a new, it-hoped-more-docile Black United Front.

"The government subverted the movement in the sixties by funding it," Jones would say later.

Rocky was never subverted. Even when he accepted government funding — as he did for ROPE, an organization he created to help ex-cons find jobs — he refused to compromise. The government cut off funding.

Rocky kept creating. The Transition Year Program at Dalhousie to help Nova Scotia blacks and natives succeed at university. The Indigenous Black and Mi'kmaq program to train minority lawyers. Find out why Robin Thicke and Icona Pop think their multiplatinum hits should be named "song of the summer." And for Miley Cyrus, Daft Punk and Bruno Mars, who weren't available to chat, here are some lyrics from their anthems to defend their honour.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

You know you want it

Blurred Lines: Robin Thicke, featuring T.I. and Pharrell
"It has a (nice) tempo, it has a sense of humour and it feels like live music instead of that synth and digital sound, which Daft Punk has (with Get Lucky) and (Bruno Mars') Treasure has," Thicke said of his infectious, naughty jam, the longest-running song on the Billboard Hot 100 chart this year at eight weeks (and counting).

song of summer contenders

Can't stop, won't stop

We Can't Stop: Miley Cyrus
"It's our party we can do what we want to, it's our house we can love who we want to, it's our song we can sing if we want to, it's my mouth I can say what I want to," Cyrus sings on her musical coming-out anthem that was originally meant for Rihanna.
She's ready for the spotlight.

Call it luck

Get Lucky: Daft Punk, featuring Pharrell

"We've come too far to give up who we are, so let's raise the bar and our cups to the stars," Pharrell sings on a disco-flavoured beat that heals the soul. "The present has no ribbon, your gift keeps on giving, what is this I'm feeling, if you wanna leave I'm with it."

Sounds like a plan!

A 2012 song dominates in 2013

I Love It: Icona Pop, featuring Charli XCX "People get wild when they hear it and it's like liberating and everybody can sing along to it. It's a party song or it's at least a song you can party to even though the message is coming out from a really hard heartbreak," said Caroline Hjelt of the Swedish duo. "If you're in the car on your way to something or festivals or pre-parties or out at the club, it works in so many ways."

Golden hit from pop's golden boy

Treasure: Bruno Mars "Pretty girl, pretty girl, pretty girl, pretty girl, you should be smiling; a girl like you should never look so blue," Mars sings in a matter-of-fact manner over a welcoming beat on his 11th top 10 hit. "You're everything I see in my dreams, I wouldn't say that to you if it wasn't true."

How sweet.

Bubble bubble toil and trouble: Jolie's such a witch

Angelina Jolie admits that on the set of Maleficent, she had the tendency to terrify children while in costume as the Sleeping Beauty baddie. "These little kids would visit the set and I would think, 'Oh, I am a Disney character,' so I would go over to them and say, 'Hi there!' They would just scream," she said while introducing footage from the film at Disney's D23

Expo over the weekend.
"One little kid even said,
'Mommy, please make the mean witch stop talking to me." There was one little kid who wasn't fazed by Jolie's appearance: her daughter, who also has a part in the film. "Vivienne was the only four-year-old who didn't scream when she saw me," Jolie said.

Admirable Oprah stays classy in the face of blatant discrimination in Zurich

Even Oprah Winfrey isn't safe from discrimination, as she learned while shopping for a handbag in Zurich recently. Winfrey tells Entertainment Tonight that when she asked a clerk at the chic Trois Pommes boutique to see a $35,000 Tom Ford bag, the clerk refused. "She says to me, 'No. It's too expensive," Winfrey remembers. "That one will cost too much and you will not be able to afford that." Winfrey, who earned an estimated $77 million in the last year, decided not to make a scene. "I could have had the big blowup thing and thrown down the (American Express) black card and all that stuff, but why do that?" she says. A spokeswoman for the boutique calls the episode "an absolute misunderstanding," saying the problem was the clerk did not recognize Winfrey.

The Word

Oh baby, it's been quite a week with the Kardashians

Just in case you needed to know what is up with America's favourite Armenian family, it looks like Kourtney Kardashian has some explaining to do. On Thursday, Michael Girgenti, a professional model, filed a paternity suit in Los Angeles County Superior Court, saying that he had a one-night stand with Kardashian. Which wouldn't be all that noteworthy, except he is saying her son Mason is actually his and not Scott Disick's. The model is now seeking joint custody of Mason. Kardashian's lawyer, Shawn Holley, said in a statement that Girgenti's accusations are "false and defamatory."

Meanwhile, sis Kim Kardashian is still refusing to sell pictures of baby North West. TMZ is reporting that she and baby daddy Kanye West have been offered upwards of $3 million for pictures of the tot, but they have declined all offers. Per the website, Kim and Kanye are either going to release them to an upscale publication (Vanity Fair is reportedly being thrown around) or they are going to put them up on social media, a la Blue Ivy.

Matching up missing socks

Our clothes dryer seems to be a Bermuda Triangle for socks and I'm sure yours is the same. They go in as a pair, but come out individually on different occasions.

When a sock comes out on its own, I throw it into a container.

Each time I do laundry and a new batch of one-sided socks come out, I make it into a fun matching game for the kids.

I have them go through all the new socks and the socks in the container to see if there are any matches. The kids have fun searching for matches and it always results in a few happy sock reunions! GWEN LERON/YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA

Safety tips

Taking your children into crowds

If you are going into a crowded venue with young children, here are three easy safety steps you can always employ to ensure their safety—and your sanity.

1. Put your business card in the child's pocket.

2. With a marker, write your cellphone number on the back of the child's hand.

3. Take a photo of each child with your phone. Should you become separated from a child, it will be easier for you to be reconnected. EVELLYN HANNON/YUMMYCHUB.CA

Life according to kids

Lessons. We could learn a lot from our children — like friendliness, curiosity and simply saying hello

TANYA ENBERG

yummymummyclub.ca

With a baby comes the old neighbourhood lady in the faded floral frock.

Sitting on our front porch bench is the only cue this woman needs to climb our stoop and, using a squeaky, high-pitched voice, repeatedly tell our child she loves him.

She also calls out an onslaught of orders (she wants him to shake her hand, wave, smile and clap). That he's not a circus monkey willing to perform tricks on demand only makes her press harder. "Shake my hand! Here! Here! Shake my hand!" she says over and over.

We don't know this woman. In fact, she barely acknowledges us, which makes this all more than just a little strange.

We suspect she's lonely, that this small interaction makes her day, so we're patient.

Of course this overzealous, baby-induced behaviour is not exclusive to her. Nothing turns presumably sane folks into big piles of goo-goo-ga-ga mush quite like fresh-faced, apple-cheeked babies.

Indeed they can inspire even the grouchiest of adults to start babbling nonsensically like oversized infants.

It's understandable — getting treated to a little squish's gummy grin is like being hugged inside and out.

It is somewhat addictive, really. We find them irresistible because they are refreshingly open to the world and fascinated by the people in it.

For instance, our son doesn't turn steely-faced when someone looks his direction. He doesn't try to avoid eye contact by sticking his nose in a giant picture book.

Like his very huggable peers, he's not cynical or greedy and he doesn't know how to lie. He is naturally warm and kind, and has boundless amounts of unbridled curiosity.

Parents, don't you just wish you could bottle this innocence, wonderment and untarnished state of being and hold onto it forever?

If only we could keep just some of that spirit alive.

The number of passersby willing to wave, giggle, coo and play peek-a-boo with unfamiliar children is astonishing, but the rate at which they close down the instant they see another grownup is depressing.

For a moment, like the creaky lady who lives up the street, they've made a connection. Then, just as quickly, they've hardened up, put on a coating of thick, impermeable skin, and set off again.

Certainly I am not suggesting we go around greeting everyone like overexcited puppies, but basic civility wouldn't be too much to ask for, would it?

We could simply acknowledge one another. Smile. Say hello

We could learn a lot from these tiny, happy creatures that so easily draw us out of our protective shells.

After all, we were once just like them, smiling, laughing and loving fully. Living vivaciously and unselfconsciously and inquisitively.

ly and inquisitively.

And, finally, we were appreciative of the simple things in life, and that truly is no small thing.

He's got those home from camp blues

How can parents help transition kids from exciting camp life back to the reality of home?

A welcome home party

When my son went to camp for the first time, he was greeted with "Welcome Home" signs, giddy siblings, neighbours, cousins and friends. We had his favourite meal ready for him and the kids had an evening in the pool. Coming home felt pretty darn good.

Plan activities

Don't let them come home and wallow in boredom. Remind them that being home is fun too and plan some fun family outings.

Support new interests

Maybe they learned a bit of guitar, enjoyed being in the camp play or discovered they had a flare for arts and crafts. Joc Palm, Director of Glen Bernard Camp suggests encouraging them to continue with these interests with local classes. Supporting their new camp interest at home is a positive step in helping with the transition home. Palm also suggests that campers contribute to a school or community project that embodies their camp's values. Camp has fostered an incredible appreciation of nature for my girls. As a result, they have been involved in projects and protests that make both them and their camp proud.

Pen pal

When my son comes home from Camp Ponacka, he is holding on tight to his "Rag Bag" — a journal given to all of the boys including email and snail mail addresses. Camp Director Anne Morawetz says encouraging the boys to keep in touch makes being away from their summer buddies a little less painful.

Social media

If your kids are on social media, they can stay connected with camp through Facebook and other channels. It is a great way for a child to keep that connected feeling to camp. JULIE COLE/YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA

Earlier to rise means later to wise?

Drowsy at the desk.

The debate about ideal school start times snoozes on as parents worry about an extracurricular collision

Quinn Cooney of Mill Creek, Wash., is excited about starting high school in September, but she's not looking forward to waking up at 5:30 a.m. to arrive on time. Classes for ninthgraders start at 7:30 a.m., 45 minutes earlier than they did in middle school.

"I think it is going to be harder to get up," said Quinn, 13. "I do think it is better to start early so that we can be finished early and do things after school, but I am worried that if I have a boring class for my first period that it will be hard to stay awake."

Decades of sleep research have confirmed what parents know: It's hard for teenagers to wake up early. Some high schools have adopted late starts around 8:30 a.m. to improve attendance and performance. But other districts say it's too complicated to shift schedules because of logistics involving buses and after-school

About 40 per cent of U.S.

public high schools open before 8 a.m., according to the U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Education Statistics, with just 15 per cent starting 8:30 a.m. or later. In districts where early starts are necessary because the same bus does multiple runs for high school, middle school and elementary students, teens often get the early

That's the case in Anne

Arundel County, Md., where public high schools start at 7:17 a.m. and buses start running at 5:50 a.m. Lisa Rodvien taught high school there, in Annapolis, and says attendance at her first-period classes was "as low as 50 per cent or Among those who showed up, "I would definitely see three or four kids with their heads down. You walk over to them to wake them up and

Earlier this year, Anne Arundel school officials laid out options for delaying start times to anywhere from 7:32 a.m. to 9:45 a.m. along with potential complications, such as additional costs if buses are added, child care issues where late-day schedules might prevent teens from picking up younger siblings after school and implications for teams

if they end up playing in the dark. Bob Mosier, spokesman for Anne Arundel schools, said no decisions have been made.

But the focus on logistics is frustrating for Heather Macintosh, spokeswoman for a national organization called Start School Later that's headquartered in Annapolis.

"What is the priority?" she said. "It should be education, health and safety. All the other stuff may not be perfect - you

It's about time

Still, advocates say several studies show the benefits of late start schools outweigh the drawbacks.

In 1996, high school start times in Edina, Minn., changed from 7:20 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. The change improved attendance, decreased tardiness and left kids more alert, better prepared and even less depressed and less likely to visit school nurses, according to studies led by Kyla Wahlstrom, director of the Center for Applied Research and Educational Improvement at the University of Minnesota.

may have to have your violin lesson before school or install lights on your field (for sports) but it will work itself out. Megan Kuhfeld, a graduate student at the University of California-Los Angeles who's been studying late-start debates since she was an undergrad at Duke University in North Carolina, surveyed some 35 districts that switched to later starts and found most were glad they'd made the switch.

Not only did students benefit, for the most part, but "the things people had feared how transportation would be affected, how sports would be affected — became the new normal and people adjusted," she said.

Kuhfeld But firsthand the pros and cons of late-start high schools, having attended one in Chapel Hill, N.C. "I enjoyed waking up later than everyone in the area next to me where there were early start times," she said. But as a member of the tennis team, she had to miss sixth and seventh period classes to compete at other schools. In junior and senior year, that meant classes had to be made up. "It was hard to balance everything," she said. "I'd get home at 8 p.m. and hadn't had dinner

Ducharme guides Canada to gold

Halifax Mooseheads head coach Dominique Ducharme can add a world championship title to his resumé.

As Team Canada's assistant coach, Ducharme helped guide the team to a 4-0 championship victory over the United States at the Ivan Hlinka Memorial men's under-18 hockey tournament on Saturday.

"Honored to be winning gold with@hockeycanada U18!" tweeted Ducharme. "Our kids wanted it, they became a team!"

It's Canada's sixth straight gold medal at the summer event, co-hosted by the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

Canada completed the tournament undefeated, and looked dominant in a rematch of last year's under-18 world championship final, which Canada won 3-2.

"When you put the Canadian sweater on, there's a lot of pride," Canada coach Dale Hunter said. "These kids here had a lot of pride and that's what they're going to bring when the (under-18) world championships come next year."

Atlantic Cat 250. Race raised thousands for family of Mike Stevens, who died a week earlier

ANDREW

Craig Slaunwhite was still a little beside himself the day after his thrilling, and somewhat surprising, Atlantic Cat 250 victory at Scotia Speedworld on Saturday night.

Going into one of the marquee 250 series races, the Terence Bay resident, who sat seventh in the Parts Pro Stock

Tour Standings, hadn't won a major race all season.

But with a rebuilt car, and Mike on his side, he knew he was the man to beat.

Mike Stevens, the largerthan-life driver from Riverview, N.B., who touched every one of his colleagues with his kindness, was on everyone's mind. The father of two died in a racing accident at the P.E.I. Oyster Bed Speedway on Aug. 3.

"I thought about him the whole race," Slaunwhite said. "It kept me cool, it kept me together. It made me want to win, it made me drive harder than the way I normally drive."

Indeed. Slaunwhite jumped out to an early lead and maintained first or second place throughout the entire race.

"We kept it all together and brought it home for a lot of people," he said. "I brought it home for my crew, my sponsors and family and friends. It was a real good one; we kept the whole package together."

In a touching gesture, Slaunwhite drove with his buddy's old steering wheel, hoisting it over his head in victory.

For snagging both top spot and leading most laps, Slaunwhite collected nearly $15,000 of the $50,000 prize pot.

But Stevens was also front and centre on Saturday night, when fans and drivers paid their respects to the father of two with several gestures, including a moment of silence
